Two Counties Make Raids On Slot Machines

The slot machine business fell on evil days the past week. To begin with a series of surprise raids in Lake County sponsored by the citizens and church groups resulted in the confiscation of a large number of slot machines and the arrest of the operators. These raids occurred Saturday and Sunday.

Following on the heels of these raids, Will county citizens stepped into the lime light when Coroner Londus Brannon sponsored a series of raids Monday evening in which an untold number of slot machines were seized or smashed. Although Coroner Brannon had kept his proposed raids under cover, slot machine promoters got wind of it and quickly spread around the county, tipping off the operators to hide these machines in steel cabinets provided for the purpose.

As a result of this action, Will County Sheriff's deputies and the Coroner's forces were at logger heads over the slot machine situation in Will county.

Monday night one of the Coroner's raids resulted in a gun fight.

The Coroner had sworn in enough farmers and business men as deputies to make an army of 35 deputies and they set forth in squads traveling in ambulances and hearses.

This subterfuge worked successfully according to Coroner Brannon and the raiders found about 10 places in the county where slot machines were operating full tilt.

The Brannon strategy, was to break open all machines and take the cash contents which the coroner said would be turned over to the Will County Milk Relief fund for use.

At Mike Oswald's place, known as Oswald's Grove on Route 7, 1 1/2 miles west of Wolf road, a squad of Brannon raiders ran into unexpected objection. Deputy Coroners Ingram, Fred Oliver, Steve Reed, Ray Walsh and Geo. Baker arrived in an ambulance and swarmed into the resort and attacked several steel slot machines bursting them open. The nickles, dimes and quarters were being transported to the ambulances, when several men leaped from their cars, brandishing guns and entered Oswald's place. According to Coroner Brannon, his men were told to stick them up and they did so. The invaders took charge of the money and took the raiders to Joliet. The Coroner reached the scene about that time, says the men were deputy sheriffs James Black, Michael Loughran, Thos. Wise and Chas. Barney. They fired half a dozen shots during the melee but all were wild.

The spokesman at the sheriff's office in the absence of Sheriff M. Breen had another version. He said: "We got a call that there was a hold up at Oswald's place, we sent 4 men out and they took over the money being seized illegally by the deputy coroners. This money will be impounded pending legal disposition.

There haven't been any slot machines operating in Will county since April and there are some machines around but they aren't running." Coroner Brannon insisted however that the machines broken open by his raiders were being operated.

He said he had the backing of Circuit Judge Edwin L. Wilson. He said, "We will continue the raids until no slot machines are running." He quoted James Burke as saying, six weeks ago, "the one arm bandits will be banished from the county", but added that Burke hadn't done anything about it.

Every time that the Will County officials make a statement that there are no slot machines in the county and that they are not operating, the citizens of the county get a great big laugh out of it and say that's the bunk because it is a known fact that the slot machines have never ceased operating regardless of the statements made to the contrary by the Will County officials.

Lightning Strikes Tinley Residence

The chimney of the residence of Louis Lippincott was struck by lightning in the severe storm Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Lippincott were seated at the supper table when the bolt struck. Mr. Lippincott was knocked off the chair and momentarily stunned while Mrs. Lippincott suffered quite a severe electrical shock. The chimney was torn apart from top to bottom and some of the plaster was knocked off the kitchen walls.

The Tinley Park Fire Department responded shortly after the crash but found that the bolt was a cold one and no fire resulted.

Two Methodist Congregations Merge

The much discussed question as to whether or not the Methodist congregations one, the Orland Township German M. E. church and the other the English M. E. church in Tinley has finally been settled.

By a unanimous vote of the members of both congregations it was decided to merge the two churches into one.

The next point in question was the location of the new edifice. It was decided not to rebuild on the site of the old German M. E. church in Orland Township which was destroyed by lightning a few weeks ago. The site of the English M. E. church in Tinley Park is not quite large enough for the size of the proposed new edifice it is said. A committee has been appointed to select a new and adequate site for the new church.

Between July 17 and 24, the Epworth League will hold its annual camp at New Lenox. Folks that's a mighty fine thing for this reason: young people will be given the opportunity to learn more of Christian principles. With Europe and Asia a mad house, with Christianity in the discard - you needs camp meetings of the New Lenox kind.

Did you know that in universities throughout this country there are professors who put the question mark on everything, including our belief in the supreme being. Oh, yes you say that they come out and do not directly declare their misbelief in God, but they refer their students to books in the university libraries which bring out these theories of atheism.

Student pastors on the campus at these institutions are waging an heroic war against these God-less teaching individuals. Our vote of approval and thanks goes out to the people in charge of the New Lenox Camp meeting. We need it, and especially need it today.

The Frankfort citizens showed their progressiveness by voting for the bond issue of the new town hall to the tune of 113 to 24. If you travel anywhere today in the states you will see public buildings being erected with aid of Federal funds from Washington. The community that neglects it's opportunity to get some of this aid is certainly passing up a good bet. Frankfort is to be commended for its approval of a new civic building.

Charles Doctor of Orland, we note has resigned his office as school treasurer after many years of honorable service. Your record, Mr. Doctor is praiseworthy. Your neighbors and townsfolk are deeply indebted to you for what you have done in safeguarding funds for the education of their children.

As long as we maintain a free educational system in this country, as long as we can have men of the high caliber and reputable standing of Mr. Doctor interested in our schools, then we should have little fear of the future and of the young. Youth if properly instructed, if given the training to seek out facts and fundamentals, if shown how to judge between that which is false and true, goes out into life well equipped to meet the problems in the struggle for existence.

Car Driven By Tinley Man Hits And Kills Man

Ernest T. Anderson, 17219 Oak Park ave., Tinley Park, figured in a very serious accident in Chicago last Friday evening when the car he was driving accidentally struck a man at Daman and Archer ave., in Chicago.

Has Odd Flower

Mrs. Wm. Semmler, Mokena, has in her garden a plant which is commonly known as "Hen and Chick" which is blossoming. This seems to be a rather unusual flower as this plant is not seen to blossom very often. The stalk is over a foot high on which the blossom is appearing which is still in the bud stage. Anybody who cares to is welcome to call and see it.

Plan Formation of New Civic Club In Mokena

Feeling the need of a local civic organization to promote the interests of Mokena, a group of professional and business men banded together and held a meeting last Friday evening in the Mokena public school.

Robert Bechstein was appointed temporary chairman. After discussing the proposed organization pro and con, the group assembled, thought it would be for the best interest of the community, to form such a club.

A committee, consisting of Rev. W. J. Geffert, pastor of the Immanuel Lutheran church of Mokena; N. F. Heimann; Arthur Schoop and Robt. Bechstein, was named to draw up a constitution and by-laws to set forth the purposes of the association.

Another meeting is to be held this coming Friday evening in the Mokena school to which this committee will make their report and present a copy of the resolutions and by-laws.

The work of organizing is expected to be completed at this meeting and an election of officers will soon follow.

More particulars regarding this new civic body will be published in our next issue.

Lightning Knocks Milker From Stool

During a short but very sharp electrical storm Thursday evening, lightning struck a barn on the Philip Ebeling farm in Orland township. The hired man was milking and the force of the concussion knocked him off of the milking stool. One arm was partially numbed for a short time but he has since recovered from the shock.

Some of the cattle in the barn seemed to be stunned for a moment but showed no ill effects. Luckily the bolt was a cold one.

WNU SERVICE

Ed Dana and his sons came home to dinner and it was a merry meal. Once the door-bell rang and Gim Jung said mysteriously, "Missie Dana, you come!" and Mrs. Dana hurried to the reception-hall, her heart slipping in her breast, to find a high school youth in a soiled sweat-shirt asking for young Bill. He was embarrassed by the warmth of her greeting.

After their always formal coffee in the drawing-room the family separated, the older sons off on their own occasions, the youngest reluctantly to his books, the husband to a directors' meeting at the San Jose Chamber of Commerce, and the mother went upstairs with Duncan and Sarah Lynn.

Duncan read a solid biography aloud in his pleasantly modulated, cultured voice and Sarah Lynn leaned back in her chair, her hands loosely clasped in her lap, her eyes half closed. The pretty room was quiet and warmly and softly lit: the canaries' cages were covered with gay chintz and the Persian kittens were asleep in their basket in endearing attitudes. Framed photographs of plump babies looked down from the walls in dewy innocence, and Mrs. Dana began to have a sense of safety, of sanctuary so complete that she started in on her rhythmic breathing again.

Then the door opened without a preliminary knock and Miss Pennington walked in. The harsh color had drained out of her hard, round cheeks and her pale eyes appeared to protrude farther than ever. She stood still in the middle of the room.

"Sarah Lynn," she said abruptly, "Gunnar Thorwald is here."

Sarah Lynn gave a muffled cry, her clenched hands at her mouth.

"Hush, Miss Pennington!" her employer said sharply. "I forbid you to—"

The governess went steadily on. "Sarah Lynn, he has come back for you."

Duncan was on his feet. "Miss Pennington, this makes no difference to Sarah Lynn now!"

"Listen to me, Sarah Lynn! He came back, thinking you were still helpless, that you would never walk again. He came to take you away with him, or to stay with you forever."

"This means less than nothing to you, at this late date, darling," the mother said. "Remember, he went away at the moment when your condition seemed most hopeless."

"Because you turned from him in horror," Miss Pennington said quickly. "You know that you deliberately sent him away."

Sarah Lynn was out of her chair, wide-eyed, shaking. "Yes—because I knew how he despised weakness! Because I didn't want to spoil his life—because I wanted him to be free!"

Duncan stepped close and put a protecting arm about her. "That's all over, Sarah Lynn. Nothing matters now except ourselves, and we're going to be married in three days!"

"Oh Penny!" Sarah Lynn turned to her.

She nodded. "We had to tell him. We told him you were well again, and that you were to marry Mr. Duncan. If you could have seen his look—"

"Hush!" Mrs. Dana said violently, her beautiful face darkly crimson. The gentle walls, so lately a sanctuary, now looked down on a battlefield. "Leave the room! Do you hear me, Miss Pennington!" The first bitter and truculent tones the pretty place had ever heard. "Leave the room and leave my house!"

The governess turned a stricken look to her. "I hear, Mrs. Dana, and I understand." If in that instant she visioned the inconvenient cottage of her brother, the curate, the sharp-tongued sister-in-law, it failed to give her pause. "I will go at once. But first"—she addressed herself to Sarah Lynn—"I must tell you this. He is going away to-night; he is going away forever."

The blood came into Sarah Lynn's face and into her heart; she could feel the exquisite agony of coming alive again. She heard her own voice vaguely, as if from a distance, saying stupid and futile things to her mother and Duncan Van Doren about being sorry. Then she was running. She ran down the hall and down the stairs and out of the house, and someone ran beside her, breathing hard, holding her hand. She knew it must be the old governess but she did not turn her head to look. There were dim shapes in the dark garden, figures converging upon her, figures without faces, familiar voices in unfamiliar words, Lightning, the greyhound leaping and bounding in beautiful joy.

"Come! The car's waiting!" someone said.

"I've packed a bag for you! Hurry!" said another.

There was the drumming of wings in the sky. Sarah Lynn flung her head back until it hung between her shoulder-blades to watch one star detach itself from its fellows and move steadily away.

"Oh, Gunnar, wait for me!" she gave a desolate cry.

"That isn't Gunnar, goose!" Sally Ann said raggedly. "But we'll take you to him! Come along!"

They were hurrying her down the driveway, one on each side of her, another pattering behind.

Miss Pennington's voice said, "Bless you!" and then there were no footsteps following. Sarah Lynn heard her saying, "Oh, Mr. Duncan, I'm so truly sorry, but it's no use, sir! I tell you, it's no use!"

Mary Dana Webster flung words back over her shoulder, kind words but final, breathless with her haste, and there was Duncan's voice, bitter and proud and hurt, and then silence.

"Here we are! Uncle Lynn's car—he's here! Get in, Sarah Lynn!"

Her Uncle Lynn's hand, his arm about her; excited voices, kind, concerned, triumphant; a cloak wrapped round her, a hat pulled down on her head, things of no importance whatever.

"Gunnar?" she said as she had said that day in the meadow after coming down in the parachute. "I want Gunnar."

"At the field, lambie. He's with Conrad Jordan now, and he's flying her luck. Then there were the good-bys, too hurried to be heard. The women kissed her and Mary Dana Webster wept happily. Sally Ann said, "I'm sailing soon, too, Sarah Lynn. Write me—Paris!"

Sarah Lynn tried to say something to her Uncle Lynn, who had made this hour; who, sitting still in his chair for more than half his lifetime, was the one to give her wings. "Uncle Lynn, oh, Uncle Lynn!"

Vance Le Roy took her elbow in a hard grip and walked her to Jordan's plane, lifting his voice over the din to say this was a great break, to wish her Happy Landings.

On the ground it was all noise and confusion and haste, but above it would be cold and clear and calm, and it was there she was going with Gunnar.

They helped her into the cabin and handed in her bag and arranged the robes so she could pull them over her.

"Hi! Make it snappy! Here they come!" a mechanic called.

Old Pete said, sniffing loudly, "Well, God love you, Ladybug!"

Sarah Lynn flattened herself and covered her head, and it was a comfort to hide, to be still, after the hubbub of the last hour. She was dizzy and faint and confused with been too much—the suddenness, the lightning transition from the lassitude of patience and submission and tolerance to this blaze of joy. Panic overwhelmed her. She was afraid to look. Gunnar would not be there; it would be Conrad Jordan or Vance Le Roy; she had lived so long with renunciation that happiness seemed an impossible phantom.

But at last she had courage enough to drop the corner of the robe she was holding, and she saw him. Very cautiously and lightly she lifted herself to a seat, her eyes still on him, assured and comforted, and fears fell away forever toward the dark earth far below. She thought of her mother with an uprush of remorseful tenderness, of poor, defeated Duncan, of old Penny, fighting like a lioness for her cub; she remembered her Great-grandmother's flight—"I don't want to go down, Sairy Lynn! I want to keep on going up and up and up!"

Now she would stand and take the brief steps which separated her from her lover; she would put her hand on his shoulder and speak to him, just as she had done all those ages ago on the night of Ardine's prank hatched in the Stewed Prune, but this time he would not scorn her. He would make a place for her beside him and she would be always beside him, and their cold cheeks

"I want to keep on going up and up and up."

to Los Angeles tonight. He thinks Conrad's going with him, but he isn't. You are, Sarah Lynn!" Mary Dana Webster was crying. "You are!"

"Yes," she said contentedly. "When will I see him?"

"At the field. But we'll be there first. I told Conrad to give us a good margin of time," Lynn Dana told her.

Sarah Lynn said suddenly, "Penny! Didn't Penny come? I didn't say good-by to Penny!"

"Don't you worry about Penny!" her cousin said robustly. "I'll take care of Penny!"

"I'll bring her over to you, by and by, if you like," Sally Ann promised. "And I'll bring Lightning, too."

They were all promising things: they would see her mother, they would talk to Duncan, they would take care of old Penny; there was absolutely nothing for her to worry about.

But the numbness was going out of Sarah Lynn's head and heart, and she knew how silly she was requiring long devotion; behind her was shock and grief and wounded pride, and she was wrung with remorse, but before her was Gunnar, and she had no choice.

"Gunnar?" she said again. "When—"

"Almost there, Sarah Lynn!"

Then they were at the field, and Vance Le Roy was handing her out of the car, grinning, and the mechanics were crowding up, and Old Pete was gulping and blowing his nose.

"Well, God love you, Ladybug! You're a sight for sore eyes!"

"Where is Gunnar?"

"Not here yet, Miss, nor Mr. Jordan, but the ship's warmed up for 'em. Well, now, will you be stowing away again?"

Sarah Lynn laughed aloud. "Yes! I'll stow away, Pete! Help me! That was the perfect way. Then she would not have to see him first before them all; their first moment would be their own."

The drama of it caught their fancy. They were all laughing, skurrying about, bringing robes from the car, carrying the bag, shaking her hand, patting her shoulder, wishing the breathless excitement, the high emotional strain, after long months with blooming houseplants and trilling canaries and purring kittens; with coming to life again.

She could see nothing, but sounds and smells reached her, and she could imagine the progress of the plan—someone of the conspirators catching Conrad Jordan's eye and drawing him aside, Conrad Jordan making an excuse to Gunnar for not flying south with him, and Gunnar climbing into the ship alone. She could feel the faint jar when he took his seat and she cuddled closer under her stifling covers.

Then they were taxiing down the field—the familiar feel of it, bumping along the earth they were about rising and rising, turning, circling, climbing, banking, climbing high and higher.

The moment had arrived now, to lift the prisoning robes and look at Gunnar, but she delayed. It had would touch, and he would turn his head and kiss her; the queer, dark Dana girl, the Ladybug, flying away in the night!

As she had delayed to look at him through terror that he might not be there, so now she dallied with the rapture of the impending moment, her heart hammering, until her gaze which had not left him for an instant began to evaluate the change she saw. It was Gunnar Thorwald, Norwegian ace, who held the stick, but it might well have been another, for the proud carriage of the head was missing, the stern set of the squared shoulders, the hard certainty, the harsh young arrogance were gone. His chin was on his breast, and he sat slumped in his seat, and in every lean line was a hurt so deep, so lonely, so intolerable that there were quick tears of tenderness in her eyes as she rose and went forward to comfort him.

[THE END.]

Ocean's Age Put at Half Billion Years; Experts Cite Saltness as a Time Gauge

How old is the earth? There are about forty ways of arriving at the answer. For the most part the answers do not agree, observes a writer in the New York Times.

The best method of estimating the earth's age seems to be that of measuring the radioactivity of rocks. They were with us when a solid crust was formed. The rate at which they send forth energy can be determined. With that to guide them, geophysicists have decided that the earth is at least two billion years old.

Before this radioactive method was developed geologists relied in part on the saltness of the ocean to appraise the earth's age. Salt was washed out of rocks and carried to sea by rivers, ran the argument. Measure the annual increase in saltness and it is easy enough to find how old the oceans are—a step in discovering the age of the earth.

In this way the geologists decided that the oceans must be about a hundred million years old. The answer was patently wrong, because fossil salt-water fish have been found which are much older. Forced to revise their estimates, the measurers of the ocean's saltness raised their figures to 350,000,000 years after making new chemical analyses. But even this was too low.

Drs. A. C. Spencer and K. J. Murata of the United States Geological survey have attacked this problem anew. They find that some salt is removed by the silt that is carried down to the sea and that the salt in the silt is not easily dissolved. Hence saltness is not a true indication of the ocean's age. Making the proper allowance, they arrive at a new figure for the age of the ocean. It is 500,000,000 to 700,000,000 years. Geophysicists who use the radioactivity of rocks as their clock will regard this revision as still too low.

Shotguns Used in World War

A comparatively large quantity of shotguns fixed for attachment of bayonets were in the hands of the American expeditionary forces during the World war, but their use was very limited. They were normally used by guards.

Poe's Tale of 'Gold Bug' Is Very Realistic

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

AT THE time Edgar Allan Poe was living at Charleston, S. C., his friend, one Legrand, was living on Sullivan island, just off the mainland. Legrand had long been ill, so that he was attended in his loneliness by Jupiter, a negro servant.

One night in the fall of the year, when Poe was visiting at Legrand's cottage, he found his host greatly excited about a rare scabbard beetle that he had found on the beach. Unfortunately he had lent the specimen to an officer at the nearby army post, but he drew a picture of the bug and handed the drawing to Poe. The latter regarded it a moment, holding it before the light of a blazing fire, and then mentioned that it looked more like a skull than a bug. Legrand became angry and took the paper back, looked at it intently and then dropped into a reverie.

A few days later Poe received a summons to come at once to the cottage. At first Legrand appeared preoccupied, then he confided a mysterious plan, stating that they must leave in the late afternoon to carry it out. Poe feared that he was ill, and concurred for the sake of expediency.

Soon they were in a desolate place where the wasteland had never been reclaimed. Legrand indicated the route and Jupiter cut the path through the luxuriant undergrowth. Presently a gigantic tree appeared.

Treasure Discovered.

Legrand gave his orders: Jupiter was to climb the gigantic tree, to count the limbs, and to go out as far as he could on the seventh limb. Some time elapsed for the climbing then Jupiter yelled in a lusty style: "Here's a skull!"

Legrand smiled with satisfaction. "Now drop the bug down through the left eye!"

Explanations were necessary to indicate the left eye, but presently the gold bug slowly descended. Legrand became more eager. He made certain calculations, marked off 50 feet, drove a stake, and began to dig. The three men dug for two hours, but found nothing.

"Jupiter, I'll kill you!" cried Legrand suddenly. "Which way was that skull facing?"

The skull was facing the tree, so the bug had indeed been put through the wrong eye. The entire calculation had to be repeated. When the digging had gone on apace the second time, a metallic sound rang out in the night. Faster they dug, and in the torchlight they saw two skeletons. Beneath them was an iron chest. The three men raised the chest, slipped the bands, and with their eyes magnetized, they beheld a king's ransom in gold pieces.

PIONEERING AUTHOR

The temptation is to write the column about the author and the box about the story. Poe is among the enigmatical writers of America. His literary position is three fold. He originated the analytical story, known to us as the detective story; he ranks high as a literary critic; and he is usually regarded as the greatest poet that our nation has yet produced. Many critics of course do not accept this last evaluation, preferring Walt Whitman.

Jupiter was left on guard while the others carried the first load to the cottage. A second trip conveyed all the treasure to Legrand's cottage. Poe and Legrand estimated the wealth at a figure far less than the actual value. As they counted it out, Poe urged Legrand to relate how he had first believed treasure to be there. Legrand summarized his story thus:

Legrand's Explanation.

That first evening beside the fire, he noticed the skull on the paper which Poe returned to him. The skull had not been on the paper when he had drawn the scabbard beetle. Later he beheld the paper before the fire, heating it cautiously, and saw the picture of a kid slowly appear in one corner. Then a series of numbers became visible, covering the paper. Decoding it, he found directions for locating a tree with a skull on a certain limb, even the number of feet was indicated in the circle. The kid was the signature of Captain Kidd.

"And what was the connection between all this and that infernal scabbard beetle that you kept talking about and that you had Jupiter let down through the eye of the skull?" asked Poe.

"I was irritated that you thought me crazy, so I thought I would give you something to think about," Legrand said. "The gold bug has no connection at all, except I was drawing the picture of it, for it is a rare species, when the hot fire called my attention to the fact I held not paper, but parchment."

DEBORAH: EMERGENCY LEADERSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Judges 4:1-9, 12-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?—Ezra 4:14.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Deborah Sang.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Why Deborah Sang.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ready for Emergencies.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Emergency Leadership.

"Every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Such is the divine summary of what was wrong in Israel during the period of the judges (Judges 21:25). "There was no king in Israel," no competent and inspiring leadership. The people lived according to the whims of the day, and, as always, humanity left to itself drifted to lower and lower levels. This was true morally and spiritually and ultimately politically, for they came repeatedly into bondage to other nations and were only delivered as God raised up judges to lead them to repentance and victory, as well as to rule over them.

I. A People in Disorder (vv. 1-3). Any people that forgets God and begins to live after the dictates of the flesh will at length come to the place where some strong man with "chariots of iron" will rule over them. We, in America, look at the other nations of the world, viewing their plight with sympathy but ever assuring ourselves that "it can't happen here." We ought to arouse ourselves and face the facts lest our own land, happy in its possession of God's great blessings of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," abuse those privileges, neglect the worship of God, spurn the leadership He gives us, and become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (II Tim. 3:4, 5). If we do not awake and repent the Lord may have to "sell" us, as He did Israel, into the hands of the oppressor.

II. A Leader Called of God (vv. 4-9).

God always has His man ready for the hour of need—only in this case His man was a woman. Glorious indeed is the record of faithful and capable womanhood in annals of God's work on earth. Deborah was a woman of unique gifts—a poetess, a prophetess, and withal "the wife of Lapidath," evidently a woman who cared well for her own household.

Brains and natural ability are much needed, especially in a time such as ours when few there are who even care to think for themselves and few who have any desire to develop native ability except for the purpose of "making money." But true leadership calls for more than talent and intelligence; it calls for a burning in the soul, a divine zeal, the urge of God in the heart.

Deborah had this fiery touch upon her life. Barak, while undoubtedly a man of ability, evidently did not have it. Many excuses have been offered for the weakness indicated in verse eight. It has been said that he was cautious, or that he wanted to give the place of honor to Deborah as the leader of her people. These suggestions may be true, but somehow one has the feeling that what he really lacked was the "flaming heart." May God give it to us, that in our much doing of His work the divine fire may warm and inspire us!

III. A Divine Victory (vv. 12-14).

God gave Deborah and Barak a great victory, but note that it was God and not man who brought about the defeat of Jabin (Judges 4:15, 23). It was a complete victory and the enemies of Israel troubled them no more for many a day.

Dr. Wilbur M. Smith aptly points out that we should look "upon these conflicts in the book of Judges as certainly symbols of the great conflict that every Christian knows as he wrestles, not with flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the world-rulers of darkness and spiritual wickedness in heavenly places. Victory is certain only when the Lord is with us and only when we walk in His will and contend against evil in His power. We are more than conquerors, but only through the Lord Jesus Christ" (Peloubet's Select Notes).

In closing this lesson the writer of these notes wishes to recognize the blessing of God in enabling him to complete two years of this service to Him and to His people. He also wishes to thank those readers in every state of the Union and in a number of foreign countries who have written to him words of appreciation, encouragement and counsel.

Value of Meditation

It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on Divine truth, that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Bishop Hall.

Attaining Perfection

The warm loves and fears, that swept over us as clouds, must lose their finite character and blend with God, to attain their own perfection.—Emerson.

ADVENTURES OF A HERO AND A LUNATIC

ALL the outfit he had was the clothes he wore. In his right hand, held high, he carried a Bible. Just where he came from no one knew, for he very suddenly appeared on the Saskatchewan plains calling upon all to "Repent, and seek Eternal Life." Now and then he changed his text and warned us that the Day of Judgment was at hand. After we staked him to some food, and a warmer coat donated by the most notorious blasphemer in the group, he was on his way again shouting his warnings.

The poor chap was obviously a "bit cracked," but as long as he kept to the prairie he was not in much danger. But, the poor misguided prophet kept heading due northwest, and just when the terrific man-killing sub-Arctic winter took a good grip on the Athabaska lake country, he came to grief. He was found badly frozen, and dying of starvation, on a trail that might see a human being once during the winter. In spite of his serious physical condition he was still shouting texts and singing hymns, but the half-breed who found him knew but few words of English anyway, so the warnings and texts fell on deaf ears. At any rate, the "breed" soon had the demented white preacher in a warm bunk, and warm food inside of him. As the days passed, though, the roving missionary developed into a raving maniac, and the half-breed benefactor left for safer surroundings. He did not actually desert the unfortunate white, but he did get a report to the Fort Chipewyan post of the Mounted Police.

When Constable Pedley, certainly one of the most courageous trailers and trackers ever to wear the scarlet and gold, arrived at the tiny log hut he found an extremely violent lunatic in charge. Moreover, in spite of frostbite and emaciation, the lunatic possessed prodigious strength and the six-foot constable had a tough time to get the prisoner under control. Wise in the tricks and wrinkles of the northern trails, Pedley wrapped the lunatic in two great big sleeping bags. Then he tied him onto the sled, and shoved off on a 500-mile mush to the nearest hospital, at Fort Saskatchewan.

Even to this day all the details of that nerve-racking trip have never been told. The big, strapping constable had his hands more than full while the mercury stuck at 40 and 50 below all the time. It was out of the question, of course, for the constable to keep the lunatic strapped up and tied down all the time, so every time he released the prisoner he had to get into a free-for-all fight whether he wanted to or not. Apart from this, there was great trouble feeding the crazy man. The constable took extreme measures in this, however, for he realized that his patient would soon die of exposure and starvation unless he was fed. Mile after frozen mile they mushed, day after day, with the lunatic centering his hatred and vituperation on the constable, and the latter centering his attention on the trail and the dogs and doing all possible to get the patient to shelter and warmth and medical attention. To add to all this terrific mental and physical punishment, Constable Pedley's dog-train was often beset by packs of flat-bellied, starving timber wolves. Pedley's integrity is beyond reproach, and he stated that he didn't stop to light fires until it was absolutely inevitable that the wolf pack would jump the train in another minute or so, so ravenous were these flat-bellied wolves.

Finally Constable Pedley and his tragic load mushed into Fort Saskatchewan, and the demented preacher was soon in good hands. After a few days of rest for himself and dogs, Pedley started off on the 500-mile return trip to his post on Lake Athabaska. All alone, mushing through that ever-lonesome land, God only knows what thoughts were Pedley's as he moved across the snowy wastes thinking over the events of the past weeks. At any rate, halfway down the Athabaska river his own mind snapped, and he wandered for days in the bitter cold until found by some Cree Indians who, strange to relate, tied him to a dog sled and mushed him back to Fort Saskatchewan, where lay the demented preacher.

The preacher was as right as rain, mentally and physically, inside of two months, but almost a year passed before Constable Pedley came back to the world to which he belonged. The force gave him a fairly decent job at headquarters. As the war left its mark on those who saw real front-line service, so did that trip through the Arctic wastes, with a lunatic for company, leave its mark on Mounted Constable Pedley, a real hero if there ever was one.

The Miracle of Milk

Noted Food Authority Explains Why It Is the Cheapest and Most Nearly Perfect Food

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

OF ALL the foods known and used by man, milk is supreme. It is a miracle of perfection—a veritable elixir of life.

Milk has powers possessed by no other food. It builds sturdy bodies for infants; strong bones and sound teeth for growing children; helps to maintain vitality in adults; and to delay the onset of old age.

It contains a greater assortment of nutritive materials than any other single food. It is the foundation of every balanced diet. Considering the services it performs for mankind—from infancy to old age—it is the cheapest food we have.

Milk is so many-sided that I always think of it as the Benjamin Franklin of foods. It is a vast treasure chest of nutrients—the most complex product of nature's chemistry. It contains nearly every chemical element of the body itself, in proportions adapted for quick and easy assimilation.

Milk fulfills six essential requirements of a perfect diet.

First: It supplies carbohydrate and fat for heat and energy.

Second: It furnishes protein that is suitable for building new tissues and repairing the millions of cells that are worn out daily.

Third: It yields minerals which build bones and teeth and regulate the subtle internal processes of the body.

Fourth: It contains every known vitamin in some degree and is abundantly supplied with the vitamins that are necessary to growth, to the smooth running of the body machine, and to the prevention of many types of infection.

Fifth: It contains water, to act as a solvent, a carrier and regulator.

Sixth: It is easily digestible. This brief summary helps to explain the unique place of milk in nutrition. Think of it! In one food, we find protein of the highest type; carbohydrate and fat; all the vitamins; every one of the minerals demanded by the human body; water; and an easy digestibility that readily changes these ingredients into vigorous life.

The Biggest Food Bargain

We occasionally hear the charge that milk is too high in price—that it is a luxury to afford enough of this master food to supply a quart daily for every child—at least a pint for each adult. That is ridiculous! The cost of milk is much cheaper than the cost of illness. And milk is not a luxury, but an indispensable necessity.

I contend that no homemaker can afford not to buy milk in adequate amounts—that if she desires health, efficiency and longevity for her family, she must provide a sufficient amount of milk before she purchases any other food.

Humankind needs milk as the flowers in the garden and the grains in the field need the blessing of rain.

Deprived of milk, children develop a multitude of ills. They become thin and weak; their resistance is low; they fall easy victims to the germs of disease; there is small hope of their reaching normal manhood and womanhood.

Nor is milk only a food for children. It is likewise essential for adults who desire to live longer, happier, and healthier lives—to fortify their bodies against the assaults of disease—to retain or regain mental and bodily vigor. It is indeed a Fountain of Youth!

Milk for Pep and Power

A quart of milk daily supplies from two-thirds to three-fourths of the total calories required by a year-old child. For a five-year old, it provides about half the day's fuel requirements, and for a ten-year old, one-third. Even a moderately active man could obtain one-fourth of his energy requirements from a quart of this precious fluid. It is also interesting to note that five-eighths cup of milk is equivalent in energy value to one and one-third eggs, or two and one-fourth ounces of lean beef.

A quart of milk yields more than an ounce of pure protein of the highest quality. Moreover, nutrition authorities hold that under normal conditions, it is the most completely digested and absorbed of all food proteins.

Milk for Minerals

As a source of calcium, milk is indispensable. Without milk, it is practically impossible for the body to obtain enough of this captain of the minerals for normal skeletal development.

It has been estimated that when the calcium requirement is met through the use of milk, the need for phosphorus will also be adequately provided.

ACID and which ALKALINE

One of the principles in planning a balanced diet is to include at least enough alkaline, or base-forming foods, to balance the acid-forming foods.

Though milk is not as good a source of iron as of calcium and phosphorus, the iron is present and in a form that can be easily utilized by the body.

Milk for Vitamins

Milk is so rich in vitamins A and G, that the addition of a quart of milk daily to a good mixed diet practically guarantees against a deficiency of either of these precious substances which promote growth, help build resistance to disease, prolong the prime of life, and help to ward off old age. It also furnishes a considerable amount of vitamin B, which promotes appetite, aids digestion and helps to prevent a nervous disorder.

Milk contains a relatively small amount of vitamin D, but this can be remedied in both bottled and evaporated milk by irradiation, or the addition of a vitamin D concentrate. It is less dependable as a source of vitamin C than any other vitamin, as the amount it naturally contains varies with the diet of the cow and is reduced by pasteurization or evaporation. This deficiency is easily made good, however, by adding to the diet fresh fruits and fruit juices and raw leafy vegetables.

In Praise of Milk Producers

As milk is man's finest food, the men who are occupied with its production are engaged in the world's most important pursuit. They labor to provide the nation with a pure, safe, clean supply of the food that makes life worthwhile for children and helps to prolong life for adults.

Let no one say that milk is expensive. Rather let every homemaker come to realize that this magnificent food would be CHEAP AT ANY PRICE!

It Was Quite Natural for the Justice to Inquire

Mr. Justice Dunne, of the New York State Supreme court, was presiding over an action for damages, when came this dialogue:

"Did you see the plaintiff knocked down?"

"Who, me?"

"Yes, you."

"No, not me."

"Did you see the defendant at all?"

"Who, me?"

"Yes, you."

"No."

"Then why are you here?"

"Who, me?"

"Yes, you."

"To see justice done."

"Who, me?" asked the judge.

MOKENA DEFEATS
TINLEY PARK 5 TO 4

Mokena remained in second place in the Junior League standing as the leader Dolton defeated Homer 9 to 3 to remain undefeated so far this season. Mokena rallied in the late innings by scoring two runs in the seventh to tie the score and one in the eighth to win the ball game 5 to 4. Here is how Mokena won their ball game. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. — 2 Cor. 4:5.

The earthen vessels had to be broken in order to let the light shine out. This is the lesson of 2 Cor. 4:3-4. We who are entrusted with the light of the Gospel must be willing to be broken if others are to see Christ in us and be won for Him. As we sound the trumpet to call men to repentance, we must be ourselves broken before God, or our testimony will be useless. Come out and hear Bro. Jimm Roberts, Evangelist of Chicago. Everyone welcome.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Sermon" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ Scientist, on Sunday, July 10.

The Golden Text was, "Let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (I Corinthians 5:8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Have mercy upon me, O God, according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit" (Psalms 51:1, 10, 12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "We cannot choose for ourselves, but must work out our salvation in the way Jesus taught. First in the list of Christian duties, he taught his followers the healing power of Truth and Love. It is the living Christ, the practical Truth, which makes Jesus' resurrection and the life to all who follow him in deed" (pp. 30 and 31).

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

In our communities in the Tinley Park and Mokena area we have a fine representation of American Legion members. Some college professor submitted a thesis for a higher degree and took it upon himself to attack the Legion as a pro-fascist organization. College professors will do those things regardless of whether or not they know that they derive their food and lodging from the workers of the country. If the Legion was a small insignificant organization; this theorist would have overlooked it. Because the Legion is large, has a large heart, has done large things in aiding the widows and orphans of men slain in France who bravely fought our cause, this man attacks it. The Legionaire at his post meeting acknowledges his duty to God and Country. Your super-brainy professor attacking the Legion, I doubt, acknowledges his duty to any one, even himself. You know in this country there are a group of people who scoff at everything, just to be different. I knew a fellow once who taught political science in a mid-western university who told his students that France was entirely right in not paying her war debt to United States. Figure that one out will you?

Do you look at the list of the coming events on the front page of the News-Bulletin. If you don't, well do so. Get out and enjoy yourself at one of these picnics. Forget your troubles and prejudices. Live and let live. Life is short, just look at the obituaries that we print each week of the fine and noble people that have passed away to their heavenly reward. The trouble with most of us is the fact that we build fences, yes fences in our mind to keep us separate from our fellow man. If you have such fences in your head, tear them down, pack a nice lunch basket and go out picnicing with your neighbors in New Lenox, Tinley Park, Frankfort and Mokena.

Along the Wolf road in Mokena a water extension project will be dug. Have you ever been out in the country and seen a fine barn with horses and cattle burn to the ground for lack of sufficient water?

If you have then you will appreciate the value of this water extension along Wolf road. Fire is one of our worst enemies, and the surprising thing about it is the fact that it comes when we least expect it, in the middle of the night. Down in Atlanta, Ga., recently several persons lost their lives in a fire in a hotel building in the early hours of the morning. Fire gives no quarter. When man becomes negligent and allows waste and rubbish to accumulate, throws cigarette butts carelessly around, fire steps in and carries on, at what a price. Extension of the water mains along Wolf Rd. shows that the people are on their toes and recognize the value of fire protection.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Hays and Mrs.

K. M. Knox have passed to their reward. Our deepest sympathy is extended to their survivors. Also sympathy is extended to the family of Mrs. J. C. Andres who has left us and passed on.

PLEASE!

NEW YORK—In the World of Tomorrow, there will be no such harsh, forbidding signs as "Keep off the Grass!" At least the New York World's Fair 1939 has already introduced, on the Fair grounds, signs reading merely "Please." The young lady in the picture, Miss Betty Rafferty, is regarding the sign with genuine pleasure.

"I never liked those signs 'Keep off the Grass.' It is certainly a happy and considerate thought to use the one word 'Please.' Surely the public will both understand the meaning and will appreciate the friendliness of the request."

Buenos Aires, "Queen City"
Buenos Aires, called "The Queen City," is situated at the edge of a vast prairie, and yet it is ranked among the world's greatest seaports. The Rio la Plata here is 23 miles wide, and its water front is lined with piers and wharves.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Hemming Curtains.—Hems and rod casings of curtains should be made the same width so the curtains may be reversed to distribute the wear.

Drying Striped Blankets.—When drying blankets that have colored stripes, hang them so that the stripes are perpendicular to the ground; any dye that runs is then less apt to go into the rest of the blanket.

Moths Like Soiled Cloths.—Moths do not attack clean woolen articles as readily as soiled ones.

Filling Nail Holes.—A mixture of sawdust and glue can be used to fill nail holes in woodwork.

Tarnished Silver.—Moist table salt will remove egg tarnish from silverware.

Starching Curtains.—Some laundresses claim that if curtains are dry before being starched they will keep clean longer.

Are You a 'Canny' Canner?

By JOSEPHINE C. BOND.

Do you get 100 per cent return from your canning efforts? It isn't always enough to do "lots of canning." You may have 500 full jars in your cellar at the end of the season, but if 100 of these leak because of cheap or old rubber rings, you are only getting an 80 per cent return on your labor.

One of the greatest mistakes the housewife canner can make, I have found, is to yield to the mistaken clerk who substitutes "unknown brands" for advertised brands produced by reputable manufacturers. Substitution may be all right at times, when an item can be used up in a short time. But when it comes to jar rings—play safe—buy a recognized brand.

There is a lot of difference in jar rings. The rubber used in them is compounded, or mixed, in much the same way that the batter for a cake is mixed, and, like cake batter, unless the recipe is tested and the ingredients of the best, the results will be disappointing. Inferior jar rings will "check" or crack and allow air to seep into the jars.

Gold Rush Crime Wave

Crime was rampant in San Francisco during the gold rush during the early fifties. Up to 1854 there were 4,200 homicides and 1,200 suicides, while the records of the next few years showed many deaths by violence, the high mark being reached in 1855 with 585. In 1851 the Vigilance Committee was formed to attempt to free the city of most of the lawless element. By 1856, when it came together a second time, order was restored in the community. More than 8,000 citizens served on the two committees.

Attractive Designs For Sheer Cottons

THESE pretty styles will make you and your daughter feel fresh and cool, and look smart and charming. They have a summery, dressy effect, and yet they are not fussy. Make them yourself, and have something very individual as well as fashion-right. It's so easy; a detailed sew chart comes with each pattern.

Afternoon Dress With Shirring. Shirring is one of the smartest details you can choose—it's used just this way in new and expensive models—on the shoulders, to give fullness over the bust, and at the sides only of the skirt. Thus your dress has animation and grace, and yet the front and back are plain and won't crush and muss when you sit down. In dimity, voile, organdy, handkerchief lawn or mull, with a youthful tie belt and frills of lace, this will be the most flattering frock you own.

Bolero Frock for Little Girls. With or without the sleeveless bolero, this dress is a perfect darling for little girls! It's so simple and yet it has loads of style, with its very puffed sleeves, very full skirt, and little round collar. Notice how short the bolero is—that's the smart new kind. Make this up in dotted swiss, dimity, organdy or batiste, and trim it with ricrac, irish edging, or linen lace.

The Patterns. 1505 is designed for sizes 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. Size 6 requires 2 1/4 yards of 35 inch material for dress alone. Three-eighths yard for bolero; 1/4 yard for contrasting collar, if desired. Two and three-eighths yards is required for trimming bolero and collar.

1545 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35 inch material. Three yards of lace edging for neckline and sleeves. One and one-fourth yards ribbon for belt.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 241 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

NERVOUS?

Do you feel so nervous you want to scream? Are you cross and irritable? Do you scold those dearest to you?

If your nerves are on edge and you feel you need a good general system tonic, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women.

For over 60 years one woman has told another how to go "smiling thru" with reliable Pinkham's Compound. It helps nature build up more physical resistance and thus helps calm quivering nerves and lessen discomforts from annoying symptoms which often accompany female functional disorders.

Why not give it a chance to help YOU? Over one million women have written in reporting wonderful benefits from Pinkham's Compound.

Brevity and Truth Brevity may be the soul of wit, but it is very far from being the soul of truth.—Holmes.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

DISCRETION

"Do you still take lessons in painting?"

"No," answered Mrs. Jud Tunkins. "After three lessons I manicured my finger nails and decided that a woman ought not to sacrifice too much for the sake of a personal career."

Vicious Circle

Customer (after paying an account)—I's square now. Shopkeeper—Yes, sir, but I hope you'll soon be round again.—Montreal Star.

True

John—What is truth? Pa—What you hear when two women are having a row.

CONDENSED

Smith looked up from his paper and handed it to his wife. "Wrong sort of heading that, isn't it?" he said, pointing to the line, "Woman's Talk."

"Why wrong?" she inquired. "Well," replied he, "there is only half a column beneath it."
